2	Yes, but the frequency needs to match the need for discussion/status/reporting.	4/1/2020 1:37 PM
3	We do need to define the release criteria, and once that is done we can see if there is a need for regular meeting.	3/31/2020 7:06 AM
4	Cover as part of TSC	3/31/2020 6:08 AM
5	Perhaps every week is too frequent far from release date?	3/31/2020 12:47 AM
6	I think currently it is necessary we have a release call, since there are changes for releases after opnfv 2.0 and we need make this happen. however, after that I think we probably don't necessarily have that call, or don't need to have a weekly call. we can have calls at important deadlines.	3/29/2020 11:56 PM
7	I have not seen a reason to be in the meeting as there have not been problems with my project towards the release timeline. IRC channel should be enough for any project concern. Can leave a comment and it can be picked up and answered if not immediately, then at the time that another time zone allows.	3/29/2020 10:05 PM
8	It should have a clearly documented/advertised release meeting and that meeting should also pull in PTLs. Especially a timeline until the release should be clearly documented, e.g see https://releases.openstack.org/ussuri/schedule.html	3/28/2020 2:00 AM

Q4 Why don't you attend the weekly release meeting (check all that apply)

Q5 There has been a suggestion that the release meeting be combined with the weekly technical discussion meeting. For example, the second half of the technical discussion meeting might be dedicated to release topics. Do you think that this is a good idea?

1	its an important part of OPNFV. Might need TSC help to refocus on what we deliver which will help drive releases.	4/1/2020 10:39 AM
2	There should also be a good/well known reason for having a release at all. If the community does not see a value in having a release, that may explain low attendance as well.	3/28/2020 2:00 AM
